Task 2.4 Promote compliance with new regulations by both suppliers and the organization

Since the pandemic no group meetings have been developed. However, interviews have been carried out with various providers in the area to obtain empirical information on the resource, ecosystem, social and to be able to chat with the fishermen about the actions that could be taken to take care of the resource. This analysis is in preparation.

Some of the findings are presented as follows.

- The use of various common names has been observed, depending on the locality and sometimes on the same groups of fishermen, making the certainty of the information obtained difficult. For this reason, visual identification materials are being developed that will allow better communication with fishermen and improve fishermen's knowledge of the resource. Here are some images of the activities carried out.
- Female leadership is important in some of the fishing localities, as they are in charge of administrative matters, representing some of the most solid fishing groups.
- Fishing groups located in areas where the only economic activity is fishing tend to better respect official regulations and implement self-imposed actions in order to prevent over-exploitation.
- In localities where there are other more lucrative economic options, fishermen tend to do so instead of fishing for blue crab as long as this is possible.
- There is also confusion in the use of the names of fishing gear
